

Typst is really cool (Smith, 2023).

Here's another sentence where I'm going to reference another article with a specific page number (A big company, 2021, p. 3).

What about if two references have the same author and year? (Foo, 2020a) (Foo, 2020b)

According to Smith (2023), this is just an example to show how you can cite just the date.

Multiple authors: (Author 1 & Last 2, n.d.). This is also an example with no date.

You can use an acronym for an author. Here's the first time I'm going to reference the author (Some Really Long Name [SRLN], 2019).

Now when I reference the same author again, it's going to show the acronym (SRLN, 2022).

References

A big company (2021). Another title. A big company. Retrieved January 1, 2023, from <https://example.com>

Author 1 & Last 2, F. M. (n.d.). Two people wrote this!. Baz. Retrieved December 14, 2022, from <https://example.com>

Foo (2020a). Title 1 with the same year. Foo parent. Retrieved December 25, 2023, from <https://example.com>

Foo (2020b). Title 2 with the same year. Foo parent. Retrieved December 14, 2022, from <https://example.com>

Smith, J. (2023). Some title. Jane's blog. Retrieved August 25, 2023, from <https://example.com>

Some Really Long Name (2019). I'm running out of ideas. Qux. Retrieved January 1, 2023, from <https://example.com>

Some Really Long Name (2022, December 31019). for titles. Abc. Retrieved January 1, 2023, from <https://example.com>